REPRESENTATIVE CASES

Obtained an emergency preliminary injunction order that required client's former salesperson, who had formed a competing business, to stop soliciting work from leads that were obtained during the time she worked for our client.

Obtained an order for a physician that declared a non-solicitation provision in his employment agreement to be unenforceable, which then allowed that physician to render medical services to his former patients without any restrictions.

Defense of nationwide employer who was accused of improperly using copyrighted software.

Represented hotel chain in nationwide litigation involving alleged construction defects caused by the hotel's builders, as well as warranty claims against the building component manufacturers.

Was successful in having his client's ERISA disability claim remanded back to the insurance provider for a full and fair review, when the insurance provider neglected to consider records and statements from insured's treating physicians and social worker.
